WARNING AGAINST PROCRASTINATION

this time, when I have a convenient season I will send for thee."

On this subject he said:
"With all the pomp and ceremony of a Roman court St. Paul was ushered into the presence of Felix the procurator of Judea. The high priest. Ananias, secures the services of one Tertullus, an orator, who is the prosecuting attorney of the occasion. With words of flattery he prefaces his remarks of accusation. St. Paul with every appreciation of the orator's ability also prefaces his remarks not with words of flattery, however, but with a keen appreciation of the dignity of the office which Felix was debasing.

"After the argument St. Paul was given a sentence of imprisonment, with a degree of freedom, so far as access to his friends was concerned. The sacred narrative informs us that Felix hoped to receive money from his friends that through this bribe he might find some excuse to set him at liberty.

A Crisis in Life.

Lake and O Trains leaves a m. ; return good time. Y that is in him.

"Unfortunately for Felix he proves false. Although he trembled as St. Paul thus reasoned, yet he deferred any definite action whereby he might have proven himself a worthy man for the position he held. The trouble with Felix was that he had been a procrastinator all his life. His conscience had rebuked him more than once for his evil life. Both officially and in his personal life he had hardened his conscience from time to time. The very wife who sits by his side to hear St. Paul has been seduced from her former husband. Hundreds of Jews could testify to the cruelty of his rule. Tacitus tells us that he exercised the office of a king with the baseness of a slave in all cruelty and lust.

"Now for once in his life he sits before a real manly man who is far above even purchasing his own personal freedom.

Now for once in his life he sits before a real manly man who is far above even purchasing his own personal freedom which may be had for the price. We might think of some preacher arguing the line points of the Christian religion especially. Ine points of the Christian pengion especially when such an opportunity was presented to him as was presented to St. Paul before this Roman governor and his Jewish wife. Instead of debating the technical points of some doctrinal question, St. Paul reasons of eternal principles that were as clear to the minds of his hearers as the a b c is to the school leave.

Judges Became Defendants.

"It is the prisoner's chance now to speak. Note the contrast between this scene and that of the trial which had aken place before. Here the prisoner betaken place before. Here the prisoner becomes the judge, not personally, but by the eternal principles for which he stands. Felix and his wife, Drusilla, are the defendants. Righteousness and temperance are not fond words to them. They make their very blood run cold. Now St. Paul may be at their merey but he reminds them that there is a judgment to come when Roman procurators and even kings of the earth shall stand before the Judge whose searching eye will pierce all the deeper because with the love of a father whose heart has been broken will he judge. Felix trembled.

whose heart has been broken will be judge. Felix trembled.

"Felix trembled? One would think that a good omen. But listen to his words. How true to his whole life! 'Go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient season I will call for thee.' It never came. He lived on as he had lived before, a cruel man, until finally he lost his position, having no more friends at the court to plead for him. He died, so tradition tells us, suffering awful agonies at the eruption of Vesuvius.

A Monumental Warning. Felix stands along with many others

"Felix stands along with many others as a monumental warning against procrastination. It is a subtle thing. Little by little it steals over one until his whole being becomes callous to those divine influences which were once cherished at the altar or the fireside. Even the appeals of a mother's love and the entrenties of a faithful wife cannot avail with a man who has given himself over to the base passions of his life. He is joined to his idols and who can save him? Only God in his wondrous mercy can possibly give any man hope.

"Observe the influence of procrastination through life. The pigeon hole in the desk makes it harder to answer the letter that is thrown there until a convenient season. The flowers and words of appreciation that we strew about and say over the casket of a departed friend often mock our remissness and tell us what many the first hazel salve, and these little ills don't bother us. Learn to look for the over the casket of a departed friend often mock our remissness and tell us what we might have been to some soul while it breathed the breath of life. One man steps above another on the rounds of the ladder because of embraced opportunities in early life, which the other neglected. One man's family is the dearest spot on earth because he has been true to the principles of righteousness and temperance; another is estranged from the wife ance; another is estranged from the wife of his young manhood because of the subtleties of the tempter whose ways have finally made him callous to holy in-

May Be Too Late.

"One day it is too late to argue. Only reasoning with all the power of God's eternal principles will avail. To quit himself like a man requires God-given power. Only God can save him. Judge between the two, Felix or St. Paul. Which had you rather be? All the pomp and glory of a Roman governor or the shaekles of a prisoner with St. Paul may be yours. Which will you choose?

choose?

"The opportunity for such choice comes daily into our lives. It is when we are given the choice of doing our duty or procrastinating. Look at the end also. Hear St. Paul cry with the laurels upon his brow already: 'I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, I have finished the course, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give unto me at that day, and not unto me only, but unto all those who love his appearing.' May God give unto each one of us grace to be worthy to say such words when we shall be called at our life's end."

A Crisis in Life.

"While time hangs on his hands or else to gratify the curiosity of his wife, Felix calls for St. Paul to give them some account of the religion he has been teaching. In some respects this is a sorry moment for Felix. For it makes another crisis in his fateful life. He comes face to face with facts of his life as St. Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come. These moments come into the life of every man and he is either a better or a worse man according as he is true or false to the highest that is in him.

"Unfortunately for Felix he proves false. Although he trembled as St. Paul thus reasoned, yet he deferred any definite action whereby he might have proven himself a worthy man for the position he held. The trouble with Felix was that
